How to prevent re-rendering, but still allow updating of props? I have a react component that has a list of currencies. I would like to have a toggle button that changes the currency in the list (or allows the user to click on a different item). I thought that when clicking the toggle, the render() method would update the list item to the new value and re-render the list. However, when clicking the toggle, the list renders with its initial value, and the textarea gets cleared. How can I, on clicking the toggle, update the value in the props of the component (the way the textarea updates when changed) and have the list update in real time? EDIT If it makes a difference, I am not rendering a list of currencies right now, but rather the currency/name of the currency in a textarea. This is what I have so far:

function handleChange(e) { this.setState({ currentCurrency: e.target.value }); } function handleClear(e) { this.setState({ currentCurrency:
  "USD" }); } const [selectedCurrency, setSelectedCurrency] = React.useState("USD"); function onSelect(
