Other than the fact that Photoshop became pivot of the graphic designing industry, there are three things that revealed this fact and that is the help, the cost and the volume. While in early years, Photoshop was the tool of the professionals and began at $5000, following years it has cost insanely high. It's surely no wonder that other competitors has caught up with Photoshop in the realm of graphic designing because of the fact that the price of Photoshop is beyond the reach of the common masses. The "help" - Adobe's support team is quite simply the best of the best. Their rivals is always itching to catch up with Photoshop in terms of features and Adobe support team is always willing to train you to use the features and freemium features of Photoshop in a basic manner. The "cost" - Initially, buying and using Photoshop would have cost you close to $50,000, but now you can get lifetime access for just around $20 a month for a subscription. This would have a lot more cost in your bank account that $50,000. The latter is more than worth, the former would've been costly. The "volume" - Now, Photoshop is the biggest tool in graphic designing. No matter the package you buy, there will be some different versions, and with topics like character creation and high profile projects, Photoshop is the tool standard. You simply can't find anyone who's not using the power of Photoshop. You can get the newest version on your machine by signing up for a monthly subscription plan, first by downloading the software and then completing this free trial plan. You can talk to them about your needs and they will match you with a suitable plan, but you will always be able to continue your training and use the package that best suits your needs - Photoshop or Photoshop Elements - and more teaching materials! The programs are updated on a regularly basis so you can continue your work with the latest Adobe software version.
