Phase 2 of this transition will also include a new exports architecture that will allow artists to choose between RAW or DNG HDR or even a combination of the two as the way to output their work. This will allow users to better leverage the dynamic range of the newer Sony sensors that can output DNG's in the 1–2 stops higher range than the JPEG standard. This will also allow for the workflow to blend HDR images into the actual fine-grained tonal range of the JPEG using a single open source software plug-in, such as Dandelion. To support that, Adobe will also be rearchitecting the way that Photoshop leverages the GPU to speed up multipage image processing to allow image blending over long time periods, and to bring the changes to the desktop and web versions of Photoshop as well. The new Mac and the Web versions will also be updated to improve performance, to make it easier for them to access the same heterogeneous device set that we've been working on improving to lead with new multitasking and runtimes in upcoming major releases of macOS and the Web. Lastly, this set of updates will unify the command and control across the post-production pipeline with a modern, unified experience through a new Command Portfolio in the next major release of photoshop cc and photoshop cs6, and for Elements as well. Substance 3D – Substance is the industry-leading provider of unparalleled visual effects and a complete 3D design suite.
