Field of the Invention This invention relates to a new and useful improvement in the field of seismic exploration in which interseismic pressure increases are utilized to provide confirmation of the depth of seismic energy penetrations into the earth and more specifically to an apparatus utilizing such increases to facilitate the cross-correlation of one transducer array of a first type with another transducer array of a second type. 2. Description of the Prior Art The prior art discloses a number of systems which utilize geophones or other pressure sensitive transducers to detect low level compressional or shear waves generated by earthquakes and other seismic occurrences. Analyses of the detected waves have been used to ascertain the dip and azimuth of the subsurface material of the earth where the detected waves originated. The prior art systems are very complex and, generally, require the use of a stand-alone or semi-automated apparatus. More specifically, many prior art systems utilize a first array of plural geophones disposed in an array at the surface of the earth and spaced from a second array of ge
